

Plastic Segregation Begins at Home

Our home is the first place where we can learn to waste properly. We should keep separate bins for wet and dry waste.

Plastic bottles, wrappers and containers should not be mixed with food waste. Clean plastic should be kept separately and handed over to the appropriate waste collector or recycling facility.

We can also reduce plastic waste by carrying clothes bags, using steel bottles and avoiding unnecessary packaged products. When children learn waste segregation at home, they develop responsible habits. These habits help protect our environment.

Therefore, plastic segregation should begin at home and become a part of everyone's daily routine.
